

TJC'S NEW WEBSITE NOW LIVE

SOUTHERN ART FOR EVERY EYE

Coinciding with TJC's refreshed brand—courtesy of the fabulous team at Social Design House—we are excited to announce our new website design. Find an updated Collection page, where you can search through our Artists and Artworks with enhanced new filters. We hope you enjoy it as much as we do!

NOW OPEN AT WOFFORD COLLEGE:

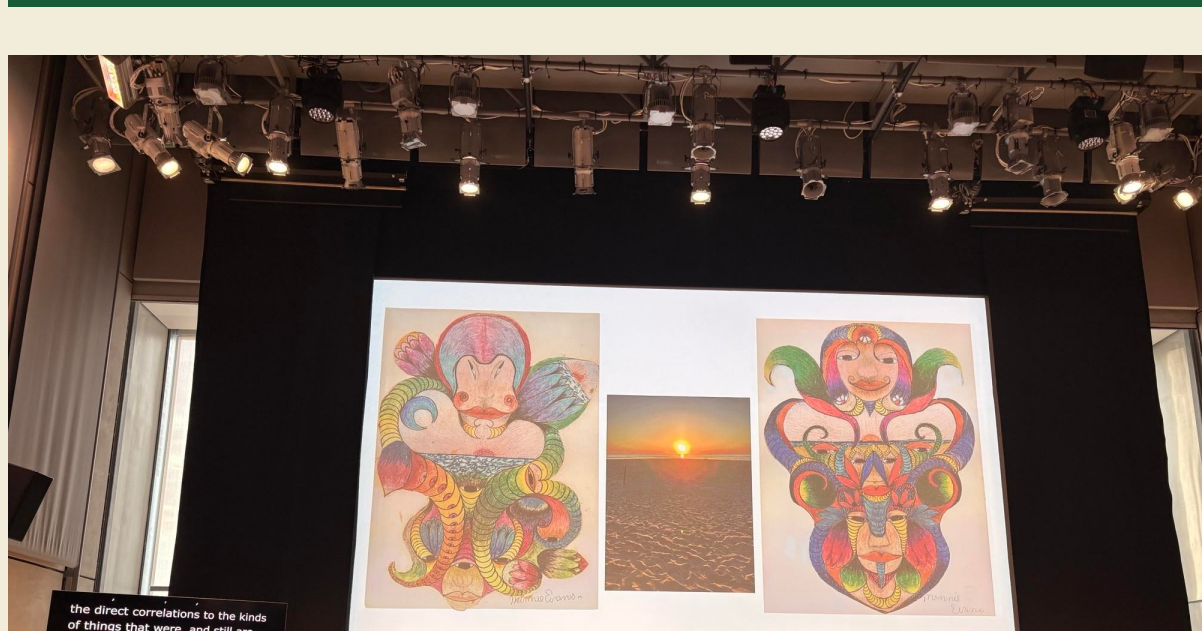

A Soldier's View

Open until December 11 at Wofford College's Richardson Family Art Museum.

From epic narratives to political cartoons, war has long shaped artistic expression. Through twenty three paintings, prints, and etchings, this exhibition explores how military conflict can change or erase personhood. Yet, through these same artworks, those identities can be preserved and may even contribute to the coherence of a new national identity.

Rufus Zogbaum (1846 – 1925) • Vicksburg • Oil on Canvas

One of TJC's works was featured and discussed in an educational slideshow and panel at the Whitney: "The Art of Minnie Evans: A Conversation." The curator of the exhibition, the High Museum's Senior Curator Dr. Katherine Jentleson, drew clear ties between the sunsets on the beaches of Wilmington, NC, and the many sunset motifs featured in Evans's drawings. The other panelists were the Whitney's Chief Curator Kim Conaty, the American Folk Art Museum's Chief Curator Dr. Valerie Rousseau, and 2023 Driskell Prize recipient and artist Alison Saar.
